My role as a student leader on campus allowed me to witness firsthand the hard work that goes into ensuring the success of Marist students. From my peers to faculty and staff, there was something to learn from everyone. My professors helped me gain skills I brought along beyond the classroom; these skills landed me an internship and eventually a full-time position at NBCUniversal. The Marist Center for Career Services helped me envision myself in the workplace through The Road to the Workplace trips and the Multicultural Talent Pipeline conference. The Center for Career Services also connected me with alumni in the media industry who are always willing to give career advice to their fellow Red Foxes. My time at Marist made me feel excited and ready to enter the real world, and looking back, I wouldn't change a thing.

Marist College provides its students numerous opportunities to be creative and gain real-world skills. Through the Honors Program and the Marist/IBM Joint Study, I obtained quality research and industry experience that developed my professional character. Those experiences enabled me to secure a full-time job with IBM as a software engineer upon graduation. The education I received from Marist College allowed me to be productive from my first day at IBM—the skills I once practiced in class are now being used to develop enterprise projects.

My first piece of advice to incoming students is to connect with your professors. It is important to make use of their office hours and seek their advice. Professors are there to support you during your tenure at Marist. My second piece of advice is to network. It is essential to network and take advantage of the student support and career services offices. During my junior year, I used both types of services to help plan my future after Marist. By using these services, I was able to meet professionals who also became my mentors and guided me every step of the way. With their help, I was able to go to the United Kingdom where I am now in the process of pursuing my master's degree at the University of Sussex.

Where would I be without Marist? To be honest, I don't want to find out. Marist has allowed me to dream the impossible and, dare I say, challenge my own worldview. Looking back on my time at Marist, the support I received from professors, the Career Center, SGA advisors, and friends has been exceptional. These are professionals / mentors who genuinely care about your well-being. As an international student, I was determined to achieve my goals after college, and none of it would have been possible without the Marist community. Anyone attending Marist should take advantage of what the college has to offer and use their skills and network to land their dream job. With my determination and the help of this community, I have landed my dream job at Goldman Sachs.

My experience at Marist was an invaluable one. It was a welcoming, comfortable, yet competitive environment that allowed me to grow both intellectually and personally. I valued the academic freedom and responsibility, as well as the countless relationships I made along the way. There were times I felt determined and unstoppable; times I felt unsure and defeated. I owe much of my success to my professors and graduate mentors who relieved the burden with their unconditional support and encouragement throughout. They believed in me, and for those reasons, I was able to believe in myself.

Marist gave me the confidence to identify a field in which I could be my best self. Because of the dual psychology and criminal justice majors program offered at Marist, I was able to advance my knowledge of forensic psychology. The internships and courses with which I engaged throughout my time at Marist were pivotal factors that allowed me to be accepted into the Master of Arts in Forensic Psychology program at John Jay College of Criminal Justice. I will forever be grateful to the friends and professors who supported me along the way and who continue to help other students follow paths like mine. Due to the experience and insights that I acquired at Marist, I fully trust my ability to succeed in both my academic and professional careers.
